Red Card for Forced Prostitution Against Trafficking in Women

Amnesty International, the Coalition Against Trafficking in Women (CATW), and various church-based organizations worked to highlight concerns about forced prostitution and sex trafficking around the 2006 World Cup - where it was anticipated that between 30,000 and 60,000 women and girls may have been coerced into the 'sex huts' that were established in many of the 12 venues for the tournament in Germany. Anti-trafficking groups point out that vulnerable women were trafficked into Germany to meet the extra demand created by advertising for sex services.
